

Pirate Song

The pirate ship sailed in the ocean like a shadow. The wind was a quiet breeze. The pirates on board made no sound. They all stood by the rail and stared into the dark. Morning was coming, and when the sun came out the pirates went to bed. All night long, they had sailed the ocean blue. Finding treasures and stealing more. The moon disappeared with the stars. The captain started to sing.

The night is gone, and so we sing. Arg!

Sleep well, mates, I will see you soon.

What will the morning bring? Arg!

Farewell night, goodbye moon.

The rest of the crew sang along and the boat swayed with their raised voices. The waves rocked and they rolled as the pirates all sang louder.

The sun shines, and so we rest. Arg!

Another night, we'll do our best.

In the dark, the deeds are done. Arg!

We will not work for the sun.

We will not work for the sun.

The captain took out a wooden flute. The music filled the air. With hands to their hearts, they sang.

The night is gone, and so we sing.

Sleep well, mates, I will see you soon.

Sleep well, mates, I will see you soon.

Aye aye, Captain.
